STATE NEWS

ALASKA

The Alaska World War II Commemoration Steering Committee (AAWCSC) has issued a call for papers for the Veterans' Day Symposium, Anchorage, Alaska, November 12-13, 1993. The topic of the symposium is Alaska at War. Themes include The Pacific Theater, The 50 Year Perspective, War and the Civilian Population, and Aftermath for the Pacific Rim. Abstracts may be submitted for individual papers or for a complete panel.

For further information contact: Alaska At War, 1317 W. Northern Lights Blvd. #522, Anchorage, Alaska, 99503.

(Alaska At War is a non-profit association formed solely for this conference. The AAWCSC members represent the public at large, state and local historical societies and local, state and federal agencies. Government agencies contribute professional staff time and support but no funds. DONATIONS ARE GRATEFULLY ACCEPTED.)

COLORADO

The Colorado Council of Professional Archaeologists (CCPA) has named Dr. Elizabeth Morris and Dr. David Breternitz as Fellows. Congratulations to these individuals, who join a long list of distinguished CCPA members.

FLORIDA

The Sarasota County Department of Historical Resources has a variety of research materials of interest to professional archaeologists. In addition to maintaining a complete set of Florida Master Site File and National Register of Historic Places forms for the county, the Department has current USGS topographic maps showing the locations of recorded archaeological sites and standing structures. Contract reports for work undertaken in the county are also available.

A preliminary inventory of approximately 2400 maps of the county has recently been completed. The department also serves as a repository for a local history collection and vertical files covering a wide range of biographical, architectural, and site- and structure-specific histories. These materials are available to researchers and should be particularly useful to contractors working in the Sarasota region.

ILLINOIS

Illinois Archaeological Awareness Week will be observed September 20-26. The theme of this activity will be "Exploring New Cultures, A.D. 1673." The focus will be on the late 17th and early 18th centuries as French explorers made contact with native peoples in the Illinois Country. For further information contact: Sharron K. Santure, ☎ 217-782-0061.

KENTUCKY

During the last year, the Kentucky Heritage Council (KHC) made inquiries to numerous museums and institutions in Kentucky that now or previously acted as curation facilities for archaeological collections. The nature of the inquiries was to ascertain which facilities wished to be recognized as an approved facility for the curation of collections from federally funded projects. Inspection visits were scheduled for the few facilities that responded. The results were that the following four facilities met the minimal standards for curation issued by the Secretary of the Interior, and were approved for curation of materials from federal projects or KHC grants:

The University of Kentucky Museum of Anthropology

The University of Louisville Program of Archaeology

Murray State University Anthropology Program

Wickliffe Mounds Research Center (not an 'open' facility).

If you have any questions regarding proper curation of materials from federal undertakings or KHC grants, contact Thomas Sanders at 502-564-7005.

MISSOURI

The City of Kansas City was recently awarded a special Historic Preservation Fund (HPF) grant for over $18,000 in a nationwide competition for Certified Local Government funds. The monies will be used to initiate a second phase of the survey and management plan for historic and prehistoric archaeological resources in Kansas City, including topographic mapping of known sites, identification of archaeologically sensitive areas, a survey report, a management plan, and recommendation for treatment for archaeological resources.

OHIO

Update on Native American Issues In Ohio

contributed by Franco Ruffini

Archaeological excavations conducted at the Ohio Historical Society's Moundbuilders State Memorial in Newark this summer sparked protests from members of the Native American community. Concerned about the excavation of what they consider a sacred site, a group of 5-13 Native Americans was granted permission to set up a sacred fire, to monitor the excavation, and to conduct a ceremony at the closing of the field investigation. Other Native Americans directed their concerns to the Governor by questioning state support of the Ohio Historical Society, requesting the creation of a task force to review the Society's role, and asking that a "moratorium be declared on any State funding of activities involving native American remains, artifacts or sacred sites..." Phone calls received by the Governor's office appeared to shift to positive support for the project from an initial expression of concern. At this point we have no indication that the Governor responded to the request from the Ohio Center for Native American Affairs.

The excavations at Moundbuilders State Memorial were headed by Dr. Dee Anne Wymer, Bloomsburg University, and Dr. Brad Lepper of the Ohio Historical Society. The first scientific testing into the earthworks in more than 100 years, the project was designed to determine the construction methods used, to obtain material for radiocarbon dating, to verify the presence of an outer wall around the earthwork, and to investigate the nature of the borrow pit within the earthworks.

A group of five archaeologists, comprised of David Brose, Wes Cowan, N'omi Greber, Franco Ruffini, and Al Tonetti, is meeting with a like number of Native American representatives to discuss issues related to the treatment of human remains from unmarked contexts in Ohio. The five Native American representatives include Jim Addington, Darrel Akins, Faye Bringsthem, Dan Grimerson, and Kenneth Irwin. The meetings were initiated with an invitation extended by John Sanchez of Capital University during the Ohio Center for Native American Affairs May 8th conference on reburial and repatriation. Participants are exploring language that may serve as the basis for legislation regarding the treatment of human remains in Ohio. Readers are encouraged to contact the participants to provide suggestions and comments.

The Ohio Historic Preservation Office and the Ohio Archaeological Council have undertaken a joint effort to gather information from 28 Native American tribes with historical connections to the area now known as Ohio. The survey seeks to establish which tribes wish to be consulted regarding the disposition of human remains with which they are culturally affiliated that are discovered in Ohio. We also want to know how the tribes wish this consultation to occur and with whom. Given the expected increase in requests for information concerning the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act, the information we compile should prove useful to archaeologists and agencies with CRM responsibilities in Ohio. For further information, please contact Franco Ruffini, Ohio Historic Preservation Office, Ohio Historical Society, 1982 Velma Avenue, Columbus, Ohio 43211-2497, or call 614-297-2470.

In a closely related matter, The Ohio Council for Native American Burial Rights, Ohio Indian Movement, is calling a statewide meeting for all Native Americans, all Native American organizations, and all other interested parties. The meeting will be held 9:00 a.m. - 6:00 p.m., on Saturday, September 19, 1992, at the Ohio Union on the campus of Ohio State University. For further information contact: The Ohio Council for Native American Burial Rights, ☎ 614-766-7370.

TEXAS

The Texas Historical Commission has joined forces with the Texas Attorney General to sue the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) for failure to follow Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act. The case in question involves a sludge dump in Hudspeth County, which applied for and was granted an EPA permit without consulting with the SHPO as required by Section 106. According to one state official, "the suit could set a national precedent requiring the EPA to follow the Section 106 consultation process before issuing permits." The area in question is known to have 117 archaeological and historical sites, and since only a fraction of the area has been surveyed, the potential for more unrecorded sites is high.

The Department of Antiquities Protection has announced a name change for its semi-annual newsletter. Formerly called the APR News & Views, the new Cultural Resources Management News & Views (or CRM News & Views) also

EDITOR'S CORNER

Finally, an article in a popular magazine that doesn't glorify looters. The July 1992 issue of Condé Nast Traveler published a 10-page article entitled "The Treasures of America --- LOOTED." This well-researched article focuses on the looting of archaeological sites on federal lands, explaining the Archaeological Resources Protection Act and understaffed agencies that try to enforce the law. With photos, figures, and facts, author Aaron Sugarman fills his article with shocking data about the annual loss of national treasures. Citing examples from Virginia's Civil War battle fields to Alaska's prehistoric sites, Sugarman give countless examples of lost resources.

The portrayal of looters is anything but romantic. Unlike articles that depict these individuals as adventurous explorers, this article exposes them for the illicit entrepreneurs they really are. Furthermore, collectors and galleries that purchase these relics are chastised for their thinly veiled ignorance regarding the acquisition of these treasures.

Finally, Sugarman commends repentant individuals who are trying to stop the trafficking of sacred objects and other controversial pieces. Through public educational programs, repatriation foundations, and volunteer patrols, a growing number of individuals are trying to protect and restore these national treasures.

Personally, I want to thank Mr. Sugarman for his special report. While writing an entertaining and informative article, he has provided a great service to the general public with this educational piece.

If you are interested in a reprint of this article, contact Condé Nast Traveler's Reader Services at 1-800-628-1030.
